Designing More Culturally Inclusive Presentations

Janice Lovelace, Ph.D.

will speak to us virtually from Seattle

Our lecture audiences are becoming more and more culturally diverse. This session will help you to develop strategies to make your presentations more culturally inclusive and welcoming of diverse perspectives. The educational concept behind curriculum transformation uses a five-phase approach to help you incorporate diversity into your speaking and teaching.

Janice Lovelace, Ph.D., has 20 years’ experience in family history research as well as 30 years’ of work in academe as a licensed clinical psychologist behind her. She is retired from college teaching, but brings those years of teaching and presenting on a variety of topics, included Black History, to her current presentations. She received certificates from the Genealogy and Family History Program at the University of Washington (2012), and the Genealogy Program at Boston University (2013), and completed ProGen 18. She developed the new online course, African American Roots: A Historical Perspective, for NGS’ Continuing Genealogical Studies series. She is a member of the Seattle Genealogical Society, and lectures extensively.
